Personal Interview, Ferron, Utah. 9 April, 1995.

I interviewed my mother, Maureen Copatch, about my great grandmother. I don't remember her that much, but I do remember a few things about her. I was only about five when she passed away in my house. But she made a quilt for my mother when she was only a small child.

My great grandmother lived in Ferron in her later years, and that's when I can remember her the best. She was the mother of my grandma Wright who lives in Clawson now. When my grandmother had my mom Maureen, my great grandmother made a quilt for her. After the quilt was made my grandma used it for her blanket. It is a patchwork quilt and it is very nice. My mom used it when she was a kid, and now it sits in my home. When my mom had Jerry, the oldest in my family, she used the quilt for a blanket for him. Then when I was born she did the same for me. Then when Kevin was born she used it a couple of times for him too. It is still in our family, and it is in my mom's room laid over a chair nice, and neat. I hope that it will still be in the family when I am grown up and have kids. I can imagine all the times that kept my mother warm from all cold winter nights, and all the times my grandmother, and great, grandmother told her stories in that quilt. After all that poor quilt has been through, I hope it will last a little longer so my kids can see how nice it was and have a piece to remember their great, great, grandmother, so they can see how much she loved her family, and what a great, and wonderful woman she was. I can still remember her and few of the things she did with me and I hope I can always remember her.
