My dad was born in St. Anthony Idaho, and he lived on a farm with his parents and 2 sisters, Lynette and SuAnn. His chores on the farm were bringing the cows in, washing their udders, feeding them and hauling potatoes. In this story, "The Halloween Nightmare," my dad gets into even more trouble than in "Mr. Waggle head".

About the year I quit trick-or-treating, they had Halloween parties. So me and my buddies went down to Grant's Drug Store and bought cans of shaving cream and hung out at the armory. When little kids or people from school came around, we'd get 'em. This was sort of traditional.

This girl I kinda liked, Suzanne Walters, came up to us, looking very nice, all dressed up and everything, and said "hi". About five of us jumped her, spraying shaving cream all over her hair, dress, everything. We all started laughing, but she didn't think it was very funny, and she ran home and told her mom. Her mom took her to the bowling alley, where my dad was bowling in a league, and started yelling at my dad. Suzanne was crying, and saying, "Look what your son did to me!"

When I got home (similar to the Mr. Waggle Head experience), my parents were again waiting for me. I said "I wasn't the only one."

They said, "You were involved".

The next day, my dad made me get all dressed up, tie and everything, and go to Suzanne's house. I had to apologize and humble myself to Suzanne in front of her mother and everything. She accepted my apology, and we were friends after that. That year, I learned another lesson on how to treat people.
