My mom grew up in a trailer court that use to be a Rattlesnake farm. The people turner them loose when the quit the buiseness.

When my mom was growing up, she lived in a trailercourt that lots of minners lived in. My mom and her freinds had to be really careful when they were playing outside becouse the rattlesnakes would come right up to the houses and just sit there all day long. They had a Baseball feild that they would go out on and play everyday excepted on Sundays. All of the nonmormons wouldn't play becouse there wouldn't have big enough teams to play baseball.

During the summer, it was to hot to do anything that required lots of energy. They would ride bikes, build treehouses, sleep outside on the lawn, play hide and seek, go horse back riding, and go hikeing. They would do most of this while they were up on the mountain. My mom loved the mountains becouse it was nice and cool. They would allways catch enough fish to eat it all summer. Our family still can. The most we have ever caught in one week was 126 fish.

My mom's best freind had a play house in the back of her yard. It looked just like a log cabin house. It had a wood burning stove that they would go out and cook on almost everyday. They would even sleep out in it in the summer. It kept the play house warm in the winter when the would sleep out in it.

My mom and her freinds would have a competision. It was to see who could build the highest treehouse. My mom would allways win becouse she would allways pick out the biggest tree she could find. She woukldn't care if it was short or not. The rest of the kids would try to find the tallest tree they could find.
